I. Introduction to Brown County

As autumn arrives each year, Brown County, Indiana, is widely considered one of the most beautiful places in America. Located 40 miles south of Indianapolis on State Road 135, it is home to the largest State Park in Indiana, one of the most popular parks in the United States. The area enjoys an abundance of unspoiled natural resources; hill country terrain with spectacular views; a wide variety of opportunities for recreation, arts and entertainment; excellent access to education and culture; and a diversity of colorful people from many different backgrounds and walks of life.

Brown County is among the least populated of Indiana's 92 counties, but enjoys a number of qualities that make it a great place to live, work and visit.

According to An Assessment and Inventory of Brown County's Rich Heritage, "Brown County is not like other lightly populated counties in Indiana. With just 15,000 residents (81st in the state) Brown County has a population density of just 48 people per square mile, compared with 182 statewide. However, Brown County has by far the highest concentration of forested land of any of Indiana's 92 counties with nearly 90% coverage and almost no large farms at all. The early settlers lived a rugged pioneer type of life for many years. Their cabins and small settlements were mere niches in the great forest that covered hills and valleys. Much of the county's 312 square miles are State and Federal lands or privately owned and not open to development.”

Camping, hiking, horseback riding, outdoor sports, hunting and fishing are plentiful. More than three million visitors arrive each year, to share in our natural beauty and recreational offerings. The Brown County State Park alone spans roughly 16,000 acres of wilderness, with Yellowwood State Forest and many other public and private tracts of undeveloped land nearby.

Known as an artist’s colony for more than 100 years, Brown County was a favorite subject of acclaimed landscape painter T.C. Steele, historic photographer Frank J. Hohenberger, and many other noted American artists during the first half of the 20th century. Today, the area remains a haven for artisans and craftspeople working in a variety of media.

Located 15 miles east of Bloomington, Indiana, site of the main campus of Indiana University, Brown County has excellent access to education, museums, music, theatre and other cultural resources.

15 miles west of Columbus, Indiana, and Interstate 65, we also enjoy the benefits of proximity to major industries such as Cummins Engine Company, economic resources and modern transportation infrastructure.

Culturally, Brown County is hill country rather than farm country, decidedly different from the plains culture that characterizes much of central and northern Indiana. Log cabins, many dating from the early 19th century, abound. The local topography is filled with a labyrinth of hills and hollows that guard the individuality of residents, a traditional feature of local culture.

Brown County has a long history as home to colorful ‘characters,’ who first came to national attention from 1905-1930, personified in humorist Kin Hubbard’s countrified, colorful cartoon character, Abe Martin, known for sayings like “It’s what a feller thinks he knows that hurts him.” While Abe’s eccentricities may have been slightly exaggerated, Brown County has a long-standing tradition of welcoming people from faraway places, people with different points of view, and people who just plain insist on being themselves.

You too will find yourself welcome here - and there are many different reasons to come.

II. Living in Brown County

Living in Brown County appeals to people who value peace and quiet, natural beauty, and a slower pace of life. Most homes are tucked away on generous tracts between the hills and hollows, with handsome views, clean air and water, and a profusion of wildlife.

Water and air quality are excellent in the absence of heavy industry, with hundreds of lakes, rivers and streams.

Like most of Indiana, Brown County's cost of living is low. Taxes are modest with the State enjoying a budget surplus and the legislature discussing personal and corporate tax breaks. Modern conveniences such as mail delivery, gas and electricity, and telephone service are generally average or better. Although Brown County has more than its share of rugged back roads, Indiana's highways, airports and rail lines are among the best in the nation.

As one of the least populated counties in Indiana, Brown County offers residents plenty of ‘elbow room,’ including more than 16,000 acres of unspoiled wilderness in the Brown County State Park. Camping, fishing, hiking, horseback riding, swimming, nature hikes, and bird watching are just a few popular activities in the park.

Other public lands nearby include the Yellowwood State Forest, Morgan-Monroe State Forest, Camp Atterbury Fish & Wildlife Area, and the Hoosier National Forest, comprising thousands of additional acres of wilderness.

Less than an hour’s drive away, nearby Lake Monroe is the largest manmade lake in the region, providing residents with opportunities for fishing, boating, water skiing, swimming and other water sports.

While peace and quiet are predominant here during most of the year, the pace of life accelerates each fall, as millions of visitors arrive to take in the spectacular fall foliage that blankets our wooded hillsides like a brightly colored quilt.

As a result, the county seat of Nashville enjoys a thriving tourist economy, with hundreds of shops, restaurants, galleries, and a wide variety of entertainment options.

In spite of the feeling that Brown County is far away from the hustle and bustle of the modern world, access to education is excellent. Indiana University is located just 15 miles west of our county seat, with all of the educational and cultural advantages of a major college campus.

For a rural community's needs, the Brown County Public Library is impressive in size, appearance and activity.

Likewise, the local YMCA is far larger and better equipped than normally expected in a sparsely-populated region. Brown County is the smallest community in the United States to operate a full service YMCA, with indoor swimming, track, basketball and volleyball courts, fully equipped fitness center, steam room, sauna, childcare center and many other amenities. While the physical plant is outstanding, the YMCA is not just a building; it's a community of people committed to healthy bodies, minds and spirits.

Brown County has long been considered a haven for artisans and craftspeople. Nationally known as an artist's colony, Brown County was a favorite subject of painter T.C. Steele, photographer Frank J. Hohenberger, and many American artists during the early years of the 20th century. Today, the Brown County Art Gallery and the local Artist's Guild hold collections of greater importance than one would normally expect in a secluded rural area. A substantial number of local private galleries also provide outlets for contemporary artists working in a variety of media.

Visit the Experience the Arts in Brown County Web site to explore more local cultural opportunities.

The international reputation of the IU School of Music as a world class conservatory encourages Brown Countians to partake of another nearby source of culture. Student recitals and productions of classical music and jazz are outstanding, often free, and occur almost daily.

The Indiana University Department of Theatre hosts major theatrical events throughout the year, ranging from Broadway touring companies to rock concerts, and many others. A multi-million dollar renovation of its auditorium and other facilities started in 1998 and promises to make it a showplace in years ahead.

The famous Bill Monroe Bluegrass Festival is held each year in Bean Blossom, featuring many top names in country music.

The combination of unspoiled natural resources, low cost of living, modern conveniences, and an exceptional variety of opportunities for recreation, arts and culture, education and entertainment makes Brown County a wonderful place to live.

III. Working in Brown County

Long established as a popular vacation destination, Brown County relies on tourism as the foundation of its economy. Beautiful hill country landscapes and spectacular foliage draw more than three million visitors to Brown County each year. But we have much more to offer than natural beauty alone.

Brown County also boasts an abundance of undeveloped land suitable for both business and residential construction, a low cost of living, and excellent access to an educated workforce. These advantages make it a great place to relocate a business.

Due to its hilly terrain, Brown County has little heavy industry. However, like the “Tech Triangle” of Raleigh-Durham, North Carolina, our area has great potential as a location for technology based businesses. Nearby Indiana University has already been named as a hub location for the future “Internet II” backbone, which will make super high speed access much more affordable to businesses in Brown County when completed. The growing importance of wireless connectivity has also been recognized by local government, and steps are already underway to provide expanded coverage in the near future.

For those interested in statistics about the workforce in Brown County, we provide the following estimates from 1998.

For the most current and detailed demographic data about Brown County, please use the links below:

HISTORICAL BROWN COUNTY

The territory that comprises Brown County was obtained from Native Americans in two treaties: the treaty of Fort Wayne in 1809, referred to as “Harrison’s Purchase,” and the treaty of St. Mary’s in 1818, which added the land southwest of the famous “Ten O’clock Line.” The first white man known to arrive was a German, Johann Schoonover. In that same year William Elkins, the first pioneer, built a log cabin and cleared land in what became Johnson Township. The earliest pioneers traveled on narrow Indian trails through dense hardwood forest with wagons drawn by oxen; by 1830 an estimated 150 settlers had arrived. There were people living in remote areas whose only contact with the outside world was the huckster’s weekly visit with his horse and wagon. As a result the pioneer way of life continued long after other counties had adopted a new pattern of living.

In 1835 settlers presented a petition to the Legislature requesting a new county and in 1836 the land was divided into five townships. Nashville, then known as Jacksonburg, was chosen as the county seat. In 1837 a log court house was built, and the first log jail. They were built on the same lots on which the present court house and log jail stand. Nashville, at that time, consisted of a cluster of log cabins and 75 people. By the time Nashville was incorporated in 1872, water powered grist mills and sawmills were scattered over the county. Each village served its own locality with at least one general store, a blacksmith shop, a church and a post office. A doctor, sometimes more than one, lived in almost every village. In 1881 there were 20 doctors in the county, and 37 churches.

In 1905 there was a Railroad Station in Helmsburg with service to Indianapolis and Effingham, Illinois. In 1907, artist T. C. Steele built a studio near Belmont in rural Brown County and Adolph Shulz came to Nashville and thus began the Brown County Art Colony. Will Vawter, V.J. Cariani, Marie Goth, C. Curry Bohn, Dale Bessire and others moved to Nashville. The Brown County Art Gallery was opened in 1926. In 1954 a larger gallery was built on East Main Street, and an Art Guild established a gallery in the old Minor House on Van Buren Street.

The story of Brown County's emergence as an important American artist's colony is recounted with color and scholarly precision in Children of the Hills by Rachel Berenson Perry, curator emeritus of the Indiana State Museum. While several major fires destroyed many of Nashville's original buildings, some significant houses, built during the town's formative years remain. With its quaint houses, tree-lined sidewalks and many alleys, Nashville provides an enjoyable walking experience during any of the four seasons.

The Brown County Community Building, like the jail, is of hewn-log construction. The two-story building was originally used as a barn in neighboring Jackson County, until it was moved to Nashville's Town Square in 1936. It was used as a community center until the 1960s.

Brown County Courthouse Historic District

The Courthouse, Old Log Jail, and the Historical Society Pioneer Village Museum are located in the center of Nashville. The District is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Historic 1874 Brown County Courthouse is located at Nashville's Town Square. On the night of 3 November 1873 the Brown County Court House caught fire and burned. When the Court House was later rebuilt of brick, access to the upper floor was only by the outside iron stairs, on each side of the front door to the door on the second floor over the main entrance.

Brown County History Center (812) 988-2899

The mission of the Brown County Historical Society is to collect, preserve and present the history of Brown County, Indiana. 42 E. Gould St, Nashville

Brown County State Park

One of Brown County's primary natural as well as historic attractions is the 16,000 acre Brown County State Park. As travelers enter at the north entrance from SR 46 they will pass through the Ramp Creek Covered Bridge of 1838 built by Henry Wolfe. Inside the Park there are a number of historic sites beginning with the North Gate House, the Upper and the Lower Shelter House, the Saddle Barn and the Amphitheater in back of the Abe Martin Lodge. The Lodge, built in 1932 was enlarged and added on several times. It provides rooms for overnight guests, meeting rooms, and a restaurant. Other historic sites inside the Park are the Aynes House, Hesitation Point vistas and Shelter, the West Lookout Tower, the Fire Tower, Hoosier Nest, Ogle Lake and Shelter, Shelter House-County Store, Lake Strahl Shelter and Restrooms, and several additional houses.

Hobnob Corner Restaurant

Across from the Nashville House, on the opposite corner of W. Main and S. Van Buren Streets is a 2-story white frame building, the former Frank Target Drug Store / Miller's Drug Store; now a popular eatery known as the Hobnob Corner Restaurant. It still captures the old Brown County drug store atmosphere.

Nashville House

Across from the Court House on the corner of Main and S. Van Buren Streets is the Nashville House, famous for its country fare and the Old Country Store. The store provides the atmosphere of an old-fashioned Trading Post.

Photographs of famous Brown Countians on the walls look down on the shopper. They were taken by one artist, sometimes chastised for not being an artist at all, was the photographer Frank Hohenberger.

Pioneer Village Museum

The Pioneer Village is located on the Northeast Corner behind the Brown County Courthouse and across the street from the Brown County History Center. The Old Log Jail is Indiana's only extant hewn-log jail. The two-story building was constructed in 1879, replacing a smaller jail, and continued in use until the 1920s.

<http://www.ourbrowncounty.com/0910s6.htm>

The Village includes a blacksmith shop and Dr. Alfred J. Ralphy's office that practiced medicine in Brown County. Operated by the Brown County Historical Society, the Pioneer Village complex displays and recalls Brown County's past in five preserved and restored buildings which allow the visitor to more clearly imagine life as it was lived. It is open weekends May through October, and by special arrangement.

Village Green Building

A little down the road from the Hobnob on 61 W. Main Street is the 3-story, red-brick Village Green Building, the former Masonic Lodge and Knights of Phytias Building with many stores, artists' shops and the Ferrer Art Gallery.

Other Nashville Sites

While several major fires destroyed many of Nashville's original buildings, some significant houses, built during the town's formative years, remain. With its quaint houses, tree-lined sidewalks and many alleys, Nashville provides an enjoyable walking experience during any of the four seasons.

The Thomas A. Hendricks House and Stone Head Road Marker

They are listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The House and property are located on 4645 E. Bellsville Pike at the juncture of SR 135 and Bellsville Road as one drives to Story.

T.C. Steele Historic Site

The T.C. Steele Site comprises 211 acres with original buildings, furnishings, paintings, partially restored gardens and five hiking trails. Theodore C. Steele and his wife Selma were the first of the artists to actually decide to call Brown County home. They had a house constructed near Belmont Indiana. Now just off State Road 46, it is operated as the T.C. Steele Home State Historic Site. Steele's large studio and home, the House of the Singing Winds, can be visited during most of the year. This site offers regularly scheduled tours year round of Steele's painting-filled studio and home. 4220 T.C. Steele Rd, Nashville

The Village of Story

A quaint village founded in 1851, Story lies nestled in the hills of southern Indiana, a place known for its weather-

beaten barns, clapboard churches, covered bridges. The “Story Inn,” formerly a turn-of-the-century general store, is open year-round with renovated historic rooms or cottages. The Village of Story is a departure plucked from Steinbeck’s “The Grapes of Wrath”. Several events are held throughout the year at the Story Inn. 6404 South State Road 135, Nashville
